James Newton, A Wisconsin
Boy in Dixie, S. Ambrose
Ed. (1961)

The Oneidas had an important impact on regimental life. They appear to have been resourceful in securing food and in influencing the culinary direction of camp life. As a diversion from writing about combat, Stockwell described how one of the F Company Indians, armed with his Belgian rifle, went squirrel shooting and came back to camp with all the squirrels he could handily carry, all shot in the head.²² Squirrel soup, an Iroquois favorite, was a welcome substitute for stale hardtack.²³ Yet the Oneidas were not credited with contributing to the overall improvement of camp life. Lieutenant James K. Newton of De Pere, commander of Company F, never specifically mentioned the Indians, but by reading between the lines of Newton's account, one can see the Oneida presence. Newton, who lived adjacent to the Oneida Indian Reservation, made reference to a culinary delight "discovered" by recruits:

You would not believe how many ways we can cook our corn so as to have a variety. We have parched corn, boiled Do: mush, corn coffee etc. but the latest invention to make it go down good is to half parch it and then grind it coarse like hominy and then boil it with a small piece of pork to season it. If you have to live on corn, altogether, by reason of this war's continuing for a great length of time longer, I advise you to cook it in the way I last mentioned.²⁴

Parched hominy seasoned with salt pork is a typical Iroquois recipe, "Onon'daat." It has been described as an Indian dish since earliest European contact and is often referred to as saganite, sapaen, or sippawin.²⁵

N.B.

"The white troops," continues Lieut. Bowley, "were now exhausted and discouraged. Leaving the line they sat down, facing inwards, and neither threats nor entreaties could get them up into line again. In vain was the cry raised that all would be killed if captured with negro soldiers; they would not stand up. From this time on the fire was kept up, mainly, by the colored troops and officers handling muskets. A few Indians, of the 1st Michigan Sharpshooters, did splendid work. Some of them were mortally wounded, and, drawing their blouses over their faces, they chanted a death song and died—four of them in a group. An attempt had been made to dig a trench through the side of the Crater towards the Union line, but the rebels got the range of that hole and plugged the bullets into it so thick and fast that no one would work in it. Of the men of my company who had rallied with me, all but one, a sergeant, lay dead or dying. The troops seemed utterly apathetic and indifferent. The killing of a comrade by their very sides would not rouse them in the least. Between 1 and 2 o'clock in the afternoon our men in the ditch, outside the Crater, had expended all their ammunition, and were quickly captured. Then the rebels planted their battle flags on the edge of the Crater, front and both flanks, not six feet from our men. They quickly pulled them back, but we knew that they were there, just on the other side of the clay bank. Muskets, with bayonets, were pitched back and forth, harpoon style. In this last movement the Confederates exposed themselves most fearlessly, and had all our men stood up at that time, the rebel loss would have been much more severe. I have good reason to believe that my own revolver did some effective work at this point."

Here ends Lieut. Bowley's account of what was transpiring in the Crater, and I will resume the narrative from our stand-point.

It is now about one o'clock. We receive another order to keep the enemy's heads down. A charge is about to be made, this time by the Alabama brigade, Gen. Saunders, who form in the ravine from which the Virginians had charged, but further south and accordingly more nearly opposite the Crater. The charge is successful—those who witnessed it say it was splendidly executed. The works are surrendered, and the prisoners pour out, making their way back, however, under a severe fire from their own batteries, some of them falling on the way.

What was here transpiring those of us in the breast-works to the north of the Crater could not see, but we immediately know the result of the charge.

From this time, during the balance of the day, everything is comparatively quiet. When night comes on we are made to fall in line and move up the trench towards our right. In the trench that led around and to rear of the Crater, dead men lie so
